APPEAL TO EVERY SENSE.

An Interesting Sketch. Laurensvill Herald.

. Hugh Wilson, in his excellent paper, abbeville Press and Banner, in its issue e 28th ultimo, publishes a very interest-and somewhat lengthy sketch of the edg and somewhat lengthy savers in upper ors and publishers of newspapers in upper outh Carolina, in 1859-60, of which he is the outh Carolina, in 1859-60, of which he is the South Carolina, in 1859-20, of which he is the author. The sketch, according to out own recollection, is remarkably accurate as to the names of editors and the papers they represented, as well as other facts contained therein, and we read Mr. Wilson's reminiscences with much interest, though at times with a touch of sadness, as they recalled many friends who long since joined the silent majority.

Bease of Touch.

Mr. J. Stone is an all round man, and he knows how to get next to us from every side. He has musical instruments to please the ear and to charm the soul.

He has solid gold, and sterling silver, and plated goods in the most beautiful shapes and the choloest jewelry. These to delight the eye and to fill the mind with symphonic poems, or to occasion the dreams of the music which we may hope to hear beyond the River.

He has the newest, the richest, and the rarest of groceries, the best canned goods and the swestest of sweetmeats to gratify the taste.

He has the goods which, on their own make their presence involuntarily known alike to guest and buyer. These last named goods come under the head of limberger cheese and fresh fish.

He developes the sense of touch by the variety and the excellence of all his goods. When the citizen hears his musical instruments, sees the goods that delight the eye, and tastes the things which go directly to the vital apot, and comes in the neighborbood of his cheese and fresh fish, that customer is sure to let Mr. Stone touch some of his ready cash. His sense of the Louch of money is seemed to be no leadership that the King mill hands would go to the mill at the usual hour, and then, if their demand was not granted to with.
